Many dynamo models postulate and depend on strong toroidal magnetic field in the solar tachocline. However, such field is subject to an array of global-scale magneto-rotational instabilities, dominated in most circumstances by the $m=1$ (tipping) modes. We review the known 2D and 3D instabilities and comment on their implications for the dynamo.