Professor Bruce Morton made fundamental contributions to the theory of geophysical fluid dynamics and turbulent convection, which are themes for this symposium. This special session is organized to recognize and celebrate Bruce’s contributions to Meteorology in Australia since his move to Monash University from the University of Manchester in 1967. In this introduction to the session we will review briefly Bruce’s career and his many contributions.