Using data collected in 2002 by worldwide magnetic observatories, spherical harmonic analyses were carried out to reveal the seasonal variations of the ionospheric current systems which produce the observed magnetic variations. Since all previous such analyses have taken the mean value of the magnetic variations as the zero point, we tried various strategies to use a local midnight reference so that unrealistic nighttime currents would be removed.